Three highest-scoring papers out of the full-paper review will be the finalists for the Best Paper Award final stage which is oral presentation. Notifications will be sent by January 15, 2109.

Oral presentations will take place during the regular time allotted for each paper and will be announced online under “program”.

Unmarked judges will assess oral presentations using the following criteria:

- Organization (20%): introduction, motivation/problem definition, methodology, results, conclusions, future work
- Quality of presentation (20%): pace/time management, voice, graphs, equations, audio/video (if applicable)
- Knowledge of presenter (40%): mastery of subject, Q&A response

The oral presentation score (30%) will be combined with the full-paper review score (70%) to produce a weighted final score for each finalist. The highest final score will be declared the winner of the Best Paper Award and announced in a special ceremony during the conference.
